Proposed Amendment — Triangular foreign mergers

Notice of Ways and Means Motion, federal budget, February 24, 1998: Mergers of foreign corporations

(50) That the provisions of the Act relating to foreign mergers be modified, applicable to dispositions of shares that occur after February 24, 1998 and to other dispositions of shares in a taxation year for which the normal reassessment period does not expire before 1999, to provide a tax-deferred rollover in respect of a disposition of shares of a foreign corporation by a taxpayer on the merger of that corporation and one or more other foreign corporations where, on the merger, the taxpayer disposed of those shares in exchange for shares of the capital stock of another foreign corporation that, immediately after the merger, controlled the new foreign corporation formed on the merger.

Federal budget, Supplementary Information, February 24, 1998: Mergers of foreign corporations

Currently, the Income Tax Act provides shareholders of a taxable Canadian corporation (a predecessor) a tax-deferred rollover in respect of a disposition of shares of the predecessor where it amalgamates with one or more other taxable Canadian corporations and those shareholders receive in exchange for their shares of the predecessor either:

- shares of the new corporation formed as a result of the amalgamation (a vertical or horizontal amalgamation); or
- shares of the taxable Canadian corporation that controls the new corporation formed as a result of the amalgamation (triangular amalgamation).

The Act also provides taxpayers who are shareholders of a foreign corporation (a predecessor) a tax-deferred rollover in respect of a disposition of shares of the predecessor where it undergoes a vertical or horizontal merger with one or more other foreign corporations and the other corporation and the predecessor are resident of the same foreign jurisdiction. The Act does not, however, provide for such a tax-deferred rollover in respect of a disposition of shares in the case of a triangular foreign merger of such foreign corporations. In the case of a triangular foreign merger, the shareholders of the predecessor receive shares of the foreign corporation that controls the new corporation formed on the merger, rather than shares of the new corporation.

The budget proposes that taxpayers that are shareholders of a foreign corporation be allowed a tax-deferred rollover in respect of a disposition of shares of the foreign corporation where the foreign corporation has been the subject of a triangular foreign merger. This proposal will apply to a disposition of shares as a result of a triangular foreign merger that occurs after February 24, 1998. As well, where a taxpayer elects, the proposal will apply to any other such disposition in any taxation year of the taxpayer for which the normal reassessment period has not expired before 1999.

(a) that is a share of the capital stock of, an interest in, or a debt of, a non-resident entity (other than a controlled foreign affiliate of the taxpayer or a prescribed non-resident entity) or an interest in or a right or option to acquire such a share, interest or debt, and

(b) that may reasonably be considered to derive its value, directly or indirectly, primarily from portfolio investments of that or any other non-resident entity in

(i) shares of the capital stock of one or more corporations,

(ii) indebtedness or annuities,

(iii) interests in one or more corporations, trusts, partnerships, organizations, funds or entities,

(iv) commodities,

(v) real estate,

(vi) Canadian or foreign resource properties,

(vii) currency of a country other than Canada,

(viii) rights or options to acquire or dispose of any of the foregoing, or

(ix) any combination of the foregoing, and it may reasonably be concluded, having regard to all the circumstances, including

(c) the nature, organization and operation of any non-resident entity and the form of, and the terms and conditions governing, the taxpayer's interest in, or connection with, any non-resident entity,

(d) the extent to which any income, profits and gains that may reasonably be considered to be earned or accrued, whether directly or indirectly, for the benefit of any non-resident entity are subject to an income or profits tax that is significantly less than the income tax that would be applicable to such income, profits and gains if they were earned directly by the taxpayer, and

(e) the extent to which the income, profits and gains of any non-resident entity for any fiscal period are distributed in that or the immediately following fiscal period, that one of the main reasons for the taxpayer acquiring, holding or having the interest in such property was to derive a benefit from portfolio investments in assets described in any of subparagraphs (b)(i) to (ix) in such a manner that the taxes, if any, on the income, profits and gains from such assets for any particular year are significantly less than the tax that would have been applicable under this Part if the income, profits and gains had been earned directly by the taxpayer, there shall be included in computing the taxpayer's income for the year the amount, if any, by which

(f) the total of all amounts each of which is the product obtained when

(i) the designated cost to the taxpayer of the offshore investment fund property at the end of a month in the year is multiplied by

(ii) the quotient obtained when the prescribed rate of interest for the period including that month is divided by 12

exceeds

(2) Definitions — In this section,

"designated cost" to a taxpayer at any time in a taxation year of an offshore investment fund property that the taxpayer holds or has an interest in means the amount determined by the formula

A is the cost amount to the taxpayer of the property at that time (determined without reference to paragraphs 53(1)(m) and (q), subparagraph 53(2)(c)(i.3), paragraphs 53(2)(g) and (g.1) and section 143.2),

B is, where an additional amount has been made available by a person to another person after 1984 and before that time, whether by way of gift, loan, payment for a share, transfer of property at less than its fair market value or otherwise, in circumstances such that it may reasonably be concluded that one of the main reasons for so making the additional amount available to the other person was to increase the value of the property, the total of all amounts each of which is the amount, if any, by which such an additional amount exceeds any increase in the cost amount to the taxpayer of the property by virtue of that additional amount,

C is the total of all amounts each of which is an amount included in respect of the offshore investment fund property by virtue of this section in computing the taxpayer's income for a preceding taxation year, and

D is

(a) where the taxpayer has held or has had the interest in the property at all times since the end of 1984, the amount, if any, by which the fair market value of the property at the end of 1984 exceeds the cost amount to the taxpayer of the property at the end of 1984, or

(b) in any other case, the total of

(i) the amount, if any, by which the fair market value of the property at the particular time the taxpayer acquired the property exceeds the cost amount to the taxpayer of the property at the particular time, and

(ii) the amount, if any, by which

(A) the total of all amounts each of which is an amount that would have been included in respect of the property because of this section in computing the taxpayer's income for a taxation year that began before June 20, 1996 if the cost to the taxpayer of the property were equal to the fair market value of the property at the particular time

(B) the total of all amounts each of which is an amount that was included in respect of the property because of this section in computing the taxpayer's income for a taxation year that began before June 20, 1996, except that the designated cost of an offshore investment fund property that is a prescribed offshore investment fund property is nil;

Proposed Amendment — Distributions by mutual fund trusts after year-end

Notice of Ways and Means Motion, federal budget, February 24, 1998: (33) That, for taxation years that end after November 1998, a mutual fund trust that fails to pay or make payable an amount of its income for the year by the end of the year and that satisfies the amount within one month after the end of the year be permitted to elect that its income and the income of its unitholders at the end of the year be determined as if the satisfaction of the amount had occurred at the end of the year.

Federal budget, Supplementary Information, February 24, 1998: Distributions by mutual fund trusts after year-end

Mutual fund trusts typically attempt to make sufficient distributions of trust income in a taxation year to their beneficiaries such that there is no tax payable at the trust level. Under the existing rules, trust distributions of income for a taxation year must be fixed by the end of the year in order to ensure that this result is obtained. Particularly in cases where foreign assets are involved, it may be difficult for mutual fund trusts to make accurate determinations of income on a timely basis.

The budget proposes to allow mutual fund trusts to elect to fix such distributions for a taxation year within one month after the end of the year. Where this election is made, the distribution is treated as if it had been made before the trust's year-end. The election applies for the purposes of determining the tax position of both the trust and its unitholders. Consequently, taxable unitholders will be required to add the deemed distributions in computing their income for the earlier year and to take the deemed distributions into account in computing the adjusted cost base of their trust units.

This measure applies to income calculations for taxation years that end after November 1998. Input from the mutual fund industry with regard to details of the design of this proposal is welcome.

Treaty-based exemption: information return

(40) That, for taxation years that begin after 1998, a corporation (or a partnership of which a corporation is a member) that carries on a business in Canada in a taxation year be required to file an information return for the year if the corporation claims that it is, under an agreement between Canada and the corporation's country of residence, exempt from tax under Part I of the Act on any part of the income for the year attributable to the business.

Federal budget, Supplementary Information, February 24, 1998: Treaty-based exemption — information return

Under Part I of the Income Tax Act, non-residents of Canada are taxable on the income from businesses they carry on in Canada. Where a person resides in a country with which Canada has a tax treaty, however, Canada's ability to tax such income may be constrained. In particular, Canada may be able to tax income from a business carried on by the non-resident person only if it is attributable to a permanent establishment situated in Canada.

In most cases, Revenue Canada will not know that a non-resident has relied on a tax treaty to claim an exemption from Canadian income tax. To help Revenue Canada administer such treaty-based claims, the budget proposes to require non-resident corporations to file an information return where they claim a treaty exemption from tax under Part I of the Act on their Canadian-source business income. The reporting requirement will apply to taxation years that begin after 1998.

(ii) compensation received under an employees' or workers' compensation law of Canada or a province in respect of an injury, disability or death, except any such compensation received by a person as the employer or former employer of the person in respect of whose injury, disability or death the compensation was paid,

(iv) the taxpayer's income from employment with a prescribed international non-governmental organization, where the taxpayer

(A) was not, at any time in the year, a Canadian citizen,

(B) was a non-resident person immediately before beginning that employment in Canada, and

(C) if the taxpayer is resident in Canada, became resident in Canada solely for the purpose of that employment, to the extent that it is included in computing the taxpayer's income for the year;

(a) the total of all amounts each of which is the product obtained by multiplying the specified percentage for a particular area for the year in which the taxpayer so resided by an amount received, or the value of a benefit received or enjoyed, in the year by the taxpayer in respect of the taxpayer's employment in the particular area by a person with whom the taxpayer was dealing at arm's length in respect of travel expenses incurred by the taxpayer or another individual who was a member of the taxpayer's household during the part of the year in which the taxpayer resided in the particular area, to the extent that

(i) the amount received or the value of the benefit, as the case may be,

(A) does not exceed a prescribed amount in respect of the taxpayer for the period in the year in which the taxpayer resided in the particular area,

(B) is included and is not otherwise deducted in computing the taxpayer's income for the year or any other taxation year, and

(C) is not included in determining an amount deducted under subsection 118.2(1) for the year or any other taxation year,

(ii) the travel expenses were incurred in respect of trips made in the year by the taxpayer or another individual who was a member of the taxpayer's household during the part of the year in which the taxpayer resided in the particular area, and

(a) no amount in respect of a net capital loss for a taxation year ending before that time is deductible in computing the corporation's taxable income for a taxation year ending after that time, and

(b) no amount in respect of a net capital loss for a taxation year ending after that time is deductible in computing the corporation's taxable income for a taxation year ending before that time, and where, at that time, the corporation neither became nor ceased to be exempt from tax under this Part on its taxable income,

(c) in computing the adjusted cost base to the corporation at and after that time of each capital property, other than a depreciable property, owned by the corporation immediately before that time, there shall be deducted the amount, if any, by which the adjusted cost base to the corporation of the property immediately before that time exceeds its fair market value immediately before that time,

(d) each amount required by paragraph (c) to be deducted in computing the adjusted cost base to the corporation of a property shall be deemed to be a capital loss of the corporation for the taxation year that ended immediately before that time from the disposition of the property,

(e) each capital property owned by the corporation immediately before that time (other than a property in respect of which an amount would, but for this paragraph, be required by paragraph (c) to be deducted in computing its adjusted cost base to the corporation or a depreciable property of a prescribed class to which, but for this paragraph, subsection (5.1) would apply) as is designated by the corporation in its return of income under this Part for the taxation year that ended immediately before that time or in a prescribed form filed with the Minister on or before the day that is 90 days after the day on which a notice of assessment of tax payable for the year or notification that no tax is payable for the year is mailed to the corporation, shall be deemed to have been disposed of by the corporation immediately before the time that is immediately before that time for proceeds of disposition equal to the lesser of

(i) the fair market value of the property immediately before that time, and

(ii) the greater of the adjusted cost base to the corporation of the property immediately before the disposition and such amount as is designated by the corporation in respect of the property, and shall be deemed to have been reacquired by it at that time at a cost equal to the proceeds of disposition thereof, except that, where the property is depreciable property of the corporation the capital cost of which to the corporation immediately before the disposition time exceeds those proceeds of disposition, for the purposes of sections 13 and 20 and any regulations made for the purpose of paragraph 20(1)(a),

(iii) the capital cost of the property to the corporation at that time shall be deemed to be the amount that was its capital cost immediately before the disposition, and

(iv) the excess shall be deemed to have been allowed to the corporation in respect of the property under regulations made for the purpose of paragraph 20(1)(a) in computing its income for taxation years ending before that time, and

(f) each amount that by virtue of paragraph (d) or (e) is a capital loss or gain of the corporation from a disposition of a property for the taxation year that ended immediately before that time shall, for the purposes of the definition "capital dividend account" in subsection 89(1), be deemed to be a capital loss or gain, as the case may be, of the corporation from the disposition of the property immediately before the time that a capital property of the corporation in respect of which paragraph (e) would be applicable would be deemed by that paragraph to have been disposed of by the corporation.

Division D — Taxable Income Earned in Canada by Non-Residents

115. (1) Non-resident's taxable income [earned] in Canada [and taxable Canadian property] — For the purposes of this Act, the taxable income earned in Canada for a taxation year of a person who at no time in the year is resident in Canada is the amount of the non-resident person's income for the year that would be determined under section 3 if

(a) the non-resident person had no income other than

(i) incomes from the duties of offices and employments performed by the non-resident person in Canada,

(ii) incomes from businesses carried on by the non-resident person in Canada,

Proposed Amendment — Treaty-exempt income

Notice of Ways and Means Motion, federal budget, February 24, 1998: Treaty-exempt income

(37) That, for the 1998 and subsequent taxation years,

(a) a non-resident taxpayer's taxable income earned in Canada be computed without reference to

(i) the taxpayer's income or loss for the year from a business (referred to as a "treaty-protected business") carried on in Canada, where any income of the taxpayer for the year from the business could, under an agreement between Canada and another country, be exempt from tax under Part I of the Act, and

(ii) the taxpayer's income, gain or loss from a property (referred to as a "treaty-protected property"), where any income or gain of the taxpayer from the disposition of the property in the year could, under an agreement between Canada and another country, be exempt from tax under Part I of the Act, and

(b) the amount deductible by reason of section 111 of the Act in computing a taxpayer's taxable income or taxable income earned in Canada for the year, in respect of a loss for another taxation year, be determined without reference to any income, gain or loss of the taxpayer for the other year from a treaty-protected business or treaty-protected property.

Federal budget, Supplementary Information, February 24, 1998: Treaty-exempt income

Under the Income Tax Act, non-residents of Canada are generally taxed on their income, including capital gains, from sources in Canada. The total amount on which a non-resident is taxed for a year under Part I of the Act is referred to as the non-resident's "taxable income earned in Canada" for the year. This total includes, among other things, the non-resident's income from employment performed in Canada, income from businesses carried on in Canada, and taxable capital gains on taxable Canadian property.

The definition of "taxable income earned in Canada," however, does not currently take certain effects of tax treaties into account. As a result, a non-resident's income that is not subject to tax in Canada may fall within the definition. A non-resident may thus be able to apply certain losses to reduce the non-resident's Canadian tax liability, even though any income or gain from the loss property or business itself would have been exempt under a tax treaty.

As part of updating Canada's income tax system to take better account of tax treaties, the budget proposes to compute non-residents' taxable income earned in Canada without reference to income, gains or losses from businesses and property where those amounts are exempt from tax under Part I of the Act because of a tax treaty. This change will apply for the 1998 and subsequent taxation years. In addition, the budget proposes that income, gains and losses from a taxpayer's "treaty-protected" businesses and properties not be taken into account in calculating losses for other years that can be applied to reduce the taxpayer's taxable income or taxable income earned in Canada for the 1998 and subsequent taxation years.

(iii) taxable capital gains from dispositions described in paragraph (b),

(iii.1) the amount by which the amount required by paragraph 59(3.2)(c) to be included in computing the non-resident person's income for the year exceeds any portion of that amount that was included in computing the non-resident person's income from a business carried on by the non-resident person in Canada,

(iii.2) amounts required by section 13 to be included in computing the non-resident person's income for the year in respect of dispositions of properties to the extent that those amounts were not included in computing the non-resident person's income from a business carried on by the non-resident person in Canada,

(iii.21) the amount, if any, included under section 56.3 in computing the non-resident person's income for the year,

(iii.3) in any case where, in the year, the non-resident person carried on a business in Canada described in any of paragraphs (a) to (g) of the definition "principal-business corporation" in subsection 66(15), all amounts in respect of a Canadian resource property that would be required to be included in computing the non-resident person's income for the year under this Part if the non-resident person were resident in Canada at any time in the year, to the extent that those amounts are not included in computing the non-resident person's income by virtue of subparagraph (ii) or (iii.1),

(iv) the amount, if any, by which any amount required by subsection 106(2) to be included in computing the non-resident person's income for the year as proceeds of the disposition of an income interest in a trust resident in Canada exceeds the amount in respect of that income interest that would, if the non-resident person had been resident in Canada throughout the year, be deductible under subsection 106(1) in computing the non-resident person's income for the year,

(iv.1) the amount, if any, by which any amount required by subsection 96(1.2) to be included in computing the non-resident person's income for the year as proceeds of the disposition of a right to a share of the income or loss under an agreement referred to in paragraph 96(1.1)(a) exceeds the amount in respect of that right that would, if the non-resident person had been resident in Canada throughout the year, be deductible under subsection 96(1.3) in computing the non-resident person's income for the year,

(v) in the case of a non-resident person described in subsection (2), the total determined under paragraph (2)(e) in respect of the non-resident person, and

(vi) the amount that would have been required to be included in computing the non-resident person's income in respect of a life insurance policy in Canada by virtue of subsection 148(1) or (1.1) if the non-resident person had been resident in Canada throughout the year,

Proposed Amendment — 115(2)(c)

Notice of Ways and Means Motion, federal budget, February 24, 1998: Former residents' foreign employment income

(43) That, for the 1998 and subsequent taxation years, the provision of the Act that applies tax under Part I of the Act to the foreign income of former Canadian residents from employment by Canadian residents be repealed and a new rule be added to tax those former residents on such income only if their country of residence has agreed, in an agreement with Canada, not to tax the income.

Federal budget, Supplementary Information, February 24, 1998: Canadian tax on former residents' foreign employment income

It is a general principle of Canada's tax system that non-residents are taxable in Canada only on their Canadian-source income. Employment income is usually considered to be sourced where the employment is exercised, not where the employer happens to reside. Thus, a non-resident who works in Canada will pay Canadian tax (assuming no tax treaty applies) whether or not the non-resident's employer is itself resident in Canada. Similarly, a non-resident who works outside Canada will not ordinarily be subject to Canadian tax, even if the employer happens to be a Canadian resident.

A special exception currently applies, however, to former residents of Canada. These individuals are taxable by Canada on income paid to them by a Canadian resident in respect of their employment abroad, unless the income is subject to tax in their new country of residence. This special rule was originally enacted to ensure that individuals temporarily absent from Canada (e.g., teachers on sabbatical leaves) could not escape taxation on the salaries paid to them by Canadian employers by ceasing to be resident in Canada. However, subsequent changes to Canada's tax treaties have largely eliminated the problem by removing the limits on other countries' rights to tax such persons.

The budget proposes that the rule taxing former Canadian residents on foreign employment income be repealed. In its place, a new rule is proposed that allows Canada to tax the foreign employment income of an expatriate only if the other country has agreed to refrain from doing so in a tax treaty or other international agreement with Canada.

These changes will apply to the 1998 and subsequent taxation years.

(c.1) a person who received in the year an amount, under a contract, that was or will be deductible in computing the income of a taxpayer subject to tax under this Part and the amount can, irrespective of when the contract was entered into or the form or legal effect of the contract, reasonably be regarded as having been received, in whole or in part,

(i) as consideration or partial consideration for entering into a contract of service or an agreement to perform a service where any such service is to be performed in Canada, or for undertaking not to enter into such a contract or agreement with another party, or

(ii) as remuneration or partial remuneration from the duties of an office or employment or as compensation or partial compensation for services to be performed in Canada, the following rules apply:

(d) for the purposes of subsection 2(3) the non-resident person shall be deemed to have been employed in Canada in the year,

(e) for the purposes of subparagraph (1)(a)(v), the total determined under this paragraph in respect of the non-resident person is the total of

(A) is subject to an income or profits tax imposed by the government of a country other than Canada, or

(B) is paid in connection with the selling of property, the negotiating of contracts or the rendering of services for the non-resident person's employer, or a foreign affiliate of the employer, or any other person with whom the employer does not deal at arm's length, in the ordinary course of a business carried on by the employer, that foreign affiliate or that person,

(ii) amounts that would be required by paragraph 56(1)(n) or (o) to be included in computing the non-resident person's income for the year if the non-resident person were resident in Canada throughout the year and the reference in the applicable paragraph to "received by the taxpayer in the year" were read as a reference to "received by the taxpayer in the year from a source in Canada",

(iii) [Repealed]

(iv) amounts that would be required by paragraph 56(1)(q) to be included in computing the non-resident person's income for the year if the non-resident person were resident in Canada throughout the year, and

(v) amounts described in paragraph (c.1) received by the non-resident person in the year, except to the extent that they are otherwise required to be included in computing the non-resident person's taxable income earned in Canada for the year, and

(f) there may be deducted in computing the taxable income of the non-resident person for the year the amount that would be deductible in computing the non-resident person's income for the year by virtue of section 62 if

(i) that section were read without reference to paragraph 62(1)(a),

(ii) that section were applicable in computing the taxable income of non-resident persons, and

Federal budget, Supplementary Information, February 24, 1998: Increasing tax-free income for low-income Canadians

The income tax system currently includes basic personal and spousal/equivalent-to-spouse credits to allow individuals to receive a basic amount of income on a tax-free basis. These credits are available to all individuals.

The amount used to establish the basic personal credit is $6,456, while the spousal and equivalent-to-spouse amounts have a maximum value of $5,380. The spousal and equivalent-to-spouse amounts are reduced on a dollar-for-dollar basis by the income of the claimed dependant in excess of $538.

These non-refundable tax credits provide federal tax relief equal to 17% of the gross amounts ($1,098 in the case of the basic personal amount, and up to $915 for the spousal and equivalent-to-spouse amounts). The credit effectively eliminates income tax on taxable income equal to the basic personal and spousal/equivalent-to-spouse amounts claimed.

This budget proposes to introduce a supplement of $500 to the basic personal, spousal, and equivalent-to-spouse credits for low-income tax filers. This effectively increases the amount of income received on a tax-free basis by up to $500 for single individuals with incomes under $20,000, and up to $1,000 for individuals with incomes up to about $40,000 who also have an eligible dependant. This will reduce federal income tax by up to $85 for a single individual, and up to $170 for a family.

The increase to the basic personal and spousal/equivalent-to-spouse amounts will be implemented by way of a supplementary non-refundable amount, calculated separately on the tax form. Single individuals will have the $500 supplementary amount reduced at a rate of 4% of income in excess of $6,956. Individuals with an eligible dependant may claim an additional amount equal to the lesser of $500 or their dependant's adjusted income, defined as $6,956 minus the dependant's income. The total amount claimed by an individual with an eligible dependant will be reduced by 4% of the filer's income minus the total of $6,956 and the dependant's adjusted income. If the dependant's net income is greater than $6,956, then the additional amount in respect of the dependant will be zero, and the dependant must file a tax return to claim a supplementary personal amount directly.

Under the current provisions relating to the transfer of tax credits between spouses, an individual must first use transferable credits to eliminate any tax liability on income in excess of $6,456 before any unused portion of these credits can be transferred to a spouse. Effective with the supplementary credit amount increases, individuals will be required to eliminate their tax liability on income in excess of $6,956 before any transfer of unused non-refundable credits to a spouse can be made. This increases the potential amount of credits that can be transferred between spouses.

This measure targets tax relief to low income Canadians. It effectively removes approximately 400,000 low income individuals from the tax rolls, and provides tax relief to an additional 4.6 million low-income individuals.

For a single parent with $20,000 in employment income, this measure will reduce federal income tax by $108 (table A7.6 [not reproduced — ed.]). A one-earner couple with $20,000 in income will pay $132 less in income tax (Table A7.4 [not reproduced — ed.]), while a one-pensioner elderly couple with income of $20,000 will benefit from a tax reduction of $103 (Table A7.8 [not reproduced — ed.]).

This measure will come into effect July 1, 1998, and will reduce taxes paid by low income individuals and families by $170 million in 1998-1999, and $270 million in 1999-2000.

Federal budget, Supplementary Information, February 24, 1998: Caregiver tax credit

Many Canadians provide care and support for family members who are seniors or who have disabilities. The tax system includes various measures that assist caregivers and supporting individuals. For example:

- individuals supporting a spouse, child, grandchild, parent or grandparent with a severe and prolonged mental or physical impairment may claim unused amounts of the disability tax credit;
- supporting individuals may claim the medical expense tax credit for qualifying expenses incurred on behalf of a dependent relative (spouse, child, grandchild, parent, grandparent, brother, sister, uncle, aunt, niece or nephew);
- expenses for an attendant providing respite care may be claimed under the medical expense tax credit. The limit on the amount of this expense that can be claimed was increased from $5,000 to $10,000 last year;
- single individuals may claim the equivalent-to-spouse credit for dependent parents, grandparents, or other relatives either under age 18 or dependent because of a mental or physical infirmity; and
- individuals supporting a relative (child age 18 or over, parent, grandparent, brother, sister, aunt, uncle, niece or nephew) with a mental or physical infirmity may claim the credit for infirm dependants. The credit was enriched in 1996 by increasing the maximum credit amount from $270 to $400 and increasing the threshold at which the phase-out of the credit begins from $2,690 to $4,103 of the dependant's net income. The change provided more tax assistance to individuals supporting infirm relatives with less than $6,456 of net income.

To provide additional tax assistance to Canadians providing in-home care for elderly or infirm relatives, the budget proposes to introduce a new tax credit for caregivers.

The caregiver tax credit will reduce federal tax by up to $400 for individuals residing with and providing in-home care for a parent or grandparent (including in-laws) 65 years of age or over or an infirm dependent relative. The credit amount will be reduced by the dependant's net income in excess of $11,500. This change will increase or extend assistance to about 450,000 caregivers providing in-home care for relatives with less than $13,853 of net income. Many of these individuals could not claim the infirm dependant credit before because they were providing care to elderly relatives with Old Age Security and Guaranteed Income Supplement benefits that put them beyond the net income threshold for dependants.

This measure is effective for 1998 and subsequent years.

With the introduction of the new caregiver tax credit, tax relief provided by the existing infirm dependant credit will be of benefit primarily to individuals providing care and support for infirm relatives who qualify as dependants even if they do not live in the same residence.

Proposed Amendment — Elimination of Pension Credit in 2001

Budget Papers, March 6, 1996: The Seniors Benefit will be simpler for seniors because it will be delinked from the tax system.

Under the current system, seniors are subject to a variety of complex tax provisions that have the net effect of reducing the after-tax value of their OAS/GIS benefits:

- OAS benefits are taxable and are partially or fully recovered from individuals with income over $53,215 [see 180.2 — ed.];
- seniors with incomes up to $49,134 qualify for a full or partial age credit [see 118(2) — ed.];
- a pension income credit is provided on the first $1,000 of pension income [see 118(3) — ed.]; and
- OAS and GIS income is taken into account in calculating tax credits (such as the spousal credit and the GST credit [see 118(1)B(a) and 122.5 — ed.]).

The Seniors Benefit will be tax free. Benefits will not have to be reported on the tax return, will not be recovered at tax time, and will not be taken into account when calculating refundable tax credits.

When the Seniors Benefit is introduced in 2001, the age and pension income credits will be eliminated. Where seniors choose to continue receiving OAS/GIS rather than the Seniors Benefit, OAS will remain taxable and subject to the current high-income recovery.

Proposed Amendment — Extended Deadline for 1997 Charitable Donations

Department of Finance news release, December 8, 1997: Deadline Extended for 1997 Charitable Donations

Finance Minister Paul Martin and National Revenue Minister Herb Dhaliwal today provided details of the measure announced last week by the Prime Minister to extend the deadline for making 1997 charitable donations. The measure will ensure that the campaign drives of Canadian charities for the current year are not set back by the recent postal strike [November 19 to December 4 — ed.].

As a special measure for this year only, donations made up to the end of January 1998 by cash, cheque, credit card, money order or tangible property other than real estate may be considered, at the taxpayer's option, as having been made immediately before the end of their 1997 taxation year. The donations must be made to a qualified donee by a taxpayer whose 1997 taxation year ends after November 15, 1997. A qualified donee is any person who is entitled to issue receipts for charitable donations. Accordingly, all taxpayers will have additional time to respond to year-end donation drives of charitable organizations.

The Ministers expressed the government's pleasure at being able to help charities during this gift-giving season and noted that the legislation to implement this measure will be included with amendments required to implement the 1998 federal budget.
